

THE EVENING STAR.
WASHINGTON.
TUESDAY, November 15, 1892.
CROSBY & NOYES, Editors.

THE EVENING STAR has a regular and permanent circulation in Washington three times larger than that of any other paper in the city. As a local NEWS paper and advertising medium it has no competitor.

Intoxicated with the fermenting fumes of political victory, it would seem as though some of the ordinarily level-headed advisers of the democratic party were bent on introducing governmental novelties of the most startling description. Hastily contrived, illogically supported schemes are floated before eyes still bloodshot from long nights of partisan vigil, lengthy periods of wakefulness frequently punctuated by such refreshment as was called for by the individual and the occasion.

With a sharp stick, pointed at both ends, the New York Herald is relentlessly pursuing the American survey extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, seeks to destroy him, officially; belittles his usefulness and in a variety of ways endeavours to bring his personality into the Blue Book and his salary from the appropriation bills. That the diplomatic service is cumbersome must be evident to any one conversant with its make-up and methods, but the idea that the annual expenditure of $400,000 is thrown away lacks everything like reasonable support. To be sure the American minister at foreign courts has less of responsibility than had Benjamin Franklin or John Quincy Adams. The first acts of diplomacy and their connection with the recognition of this people as a nation or the making and preservation of peace are no longer of use, but in their place have come matters of great commercial importance. In the eyes of some, such selfishness as the extension of trade and the opening of European ports to the American market may seem unworthy their lofty consideration, but to the millions whose livelihood depends upon these enormous and rapidly developing industries the sum paid to support our diplomatic service is as nothing when compared with the vast amount of foreign gold that diplomacy brings to our distribution all over this country. Considerable must be done to encourage the use and sale of American products in other lands, but no consul could deal with a foreign government, not because of any mental or educational shortcoming in the consul, but because the foreign government would not treat with him.

Had this benevolent proposition come from a calmly-couraged community in Kansas it would not have shocked any one, but when it is known to have had its origin in a great commercial center there are some things connected with it that, as Dunderberg says, "no fellow can understand."

If Congress makes any move toward reforming our diplomatic service it should give our representatives at the principal courts the rank of ambassador, and they may stand on the same official level as the representatives of other first-class powers. By and by the diplomatic service may be abolished, but that day will not come until foreign nations cease to contribute so freely to our population, until international trade no longer causes international complications, until the lion and the lamb can lie down together without strutting up the lion's appetite or causing the lamb to fear annihilation.

The proposition to teach civics in the public schools of Washington is one that commends itself to every thoughtful person in the city. The science of good citizenship—and there is no other sort to be considered, in this connection—is the science of the foundation of society in law, order, regular living. The elements of this the most important secular science can be easily taught in the primary schools, and are as a matter of fact taught in many public and private schools in the land. The proposition is to make such teaching compulsory in the form of a manual of civics, against juvenile offenses such as stone throwing, trifling with or cruelty to dogs and other animals, flying kites and making fires on the streets. The youth is instructed that these and other acts are not only wrong in themselves as leading to injurious results, but infringements of the laws made for the protection of society and the safety of property and the individual. The more elements, perhaps at first, orally imparted in the simplest manner, and that is necessary in the juvenile grades. But a brief statement of civics and rights, with a comprehensive view of local and federal government and of the relation of these to international law, contained in a single treatise, prepared for the United States public schools, and of some of those French and Swiss school books that have been praised as patterns of conciseness and adaptability should follow closely any oral instruction that may be given. All such schooling in civics is rationally founded on the moral law.

The judicial appointments of the President have been conspicuously good, extending respectful admiration even from the enemies of his administration. He has not made such appointments recklessly as a partisan, but has sought carefully for the best-equipped lawyers of ability and integrity, upright men, commanding the respect and confidence of the community in which they were to serve. Undoubtedly the same wise policy will be pursued in the matter of the District appointments.

The Chesapeake oysterman, surrounded as he is by hardships and horrors, does not readily associate himself in the mind with an idea of humor. But when a dredger bearing that name so reminiscent of delicate mirth as "Pinafore" comes to attention, as it did recently through its destruction, it indicates a subtle appreciation of the effect of contrast that would do credit to Liberator's Gilbert himself. The man who named the boat is an unrecognized genius.

Mark Twain's humor-crazed corner, who held an inquest on an Egyptian mummy and charged the county with compound interest on the regular fee from the time of Moses, has something really akin to a parallel in the Buffalo corner who held an inquest on the recently unearthed bones of a few Indians whose tribe became extinct prior to the year 1880.

There are evidences of a feeling that when Mr. Cleveland comes in office will be set out in front of the White House in a large basket with the sign "take care" over it. But this world is full of disappointments.

It may be difficult to realize that this country's property has been so great when the reports from people who feel the need of employment from the government begin to come in.

"Sir Edwin Cook," swindler, goes to prison from New York and "Mary, the Queen of Beggers," gets into the police court of the same city. This is truly an unfavorable season for titles.

If women, as tradition asserts, cannot keep a secret, Mrs. Leane is liable to produce some seasonal embarrassment through her ambitions toward the executive session.

There are evidences of a scheme on foot to take the watch dog of the treasury out and lose him.
